

The House

You are a burglar planning to rob this house.

Read the text below and underline or circle information about this house that is important to you as a burglar.

Sam and Jo arrived at the house. "I told you today was good for skipping school, my parents are never home on Thursday," said Sam. They went through the side door, which was always open, then through the double garage where three brand new electric bikes were parked. Arriving in the huge living room, Sam turned on the stereo. "Don't worry about the noise, we don't have close neighbors," Sam shouted.

The kids were hungry and prepared sandwiches in the kitchen-diner. The adjoining dining room, with all the china, silver, and cut glass, was no place to relax. Sam said they wouldn't go to the basement because it was very damp and musty there. Instead, they headed to the attic. Sam said : "This is where my parents keep their famous paintings and their coin collection," as they peered into the den on their way.

They walked up the stairs and past the four bedrooms and two bathrooms. Sam showed Jo their parents' closet which was filled with watches and jewels. They continued to attic, and crawled through the opening in the roof that had rotted away after a persistent leak. After eating their sandwiches on the roof, they climbed down on the balcony and jumped down to the garden. They played for hours, running around the outside swimming pool and through the vegetable patch.

The House

You are a real-estate agent planning to sell this house.

Read the text below and underline or circle information about this house that is important to you as a real-estate agent.

Sam and Jo arrived at the house. "I told you today was good for skipping school, my parents are never home on Thursday," said Sam. They went through the side door, which was always open, then through the double garage where three brand new electric bikes were parked. Arriving in the huge living room, Sam turned on the stereo. "Don't worry about the noise, we don't have close neighbors," Sam shouted.

The kids were hungry and prepared sandwiches in the kitchen-diner. The adjoining dining room, with all the china, silver, and cut glass, was no place to relax. Sam said they wouldn't go to the basement because it was very damp and musty there. Instead, they headed to the attic. Sam said : "This is where my parents keep their famous paintings and their coin collection," as they peered into the den on their way.

They walked up the stairs and past the four bedrooms and two bathrooms. Sam showed Jo their parents' closet which was filled with watches and jewels. They continued to attic, and crawled through the opening in the roof that had rotted away after a persistent leak. After eating their sandwiches on the roof, they climbed down on the balcony and jumped down to the garden. They played for hours, running around the outside swimming pool and through the vegetable patch.